3 things you need to know

1 US, BRITAIN CALL FOR IMMEDIATE CEASE-FIRE IN YEMEN

The United States and Britain called on Sunday for an immediate and unconditional cease-fire in Yemen to end violence between Iran-backed Houthis and the government, which is supported by Gulf states. A Saudi-led campaign in Yemen has come under heavy criticism since an air strike on a funeral gathering in the Yemeni capital Sanaa that killed 140 people according to a United Nations' estimate and 82 according to the Houthis. On Saturday, a U.S. admiral said a destroyer had again been targeted in the Red Sea in an apparent failed missile attack launched from the coast of Yemen. REUTERS

2 IRAQI ARMY DROPS LEAFLETS OVER MOSUL WARNING OF OFFENSIVE

The Iraqi army dropped tens of thousands of leaflets over Mosul before dawn on Sunday, warning residents an offensive to recapture the city from Islamic State was in its final stages of preparation, according to a military statement in Baghdad. The leaflets carried several messages, one of them assuring the population that advancing army units and air strikes "will not target civilians" and another telling them to avoid known locations of Islamic State militants. The assault on Mosul, the last city still under control of the ultra-hardline Islamic State in Iraq, could begin this month with the support of a U.S.-led coalition, according to Iraqi government and military officials. Islamic State fighters are dug in and are expected to fight hard. They have forced civilians to stay in harm's way during previous battles to defend territory. REUTERS

3 GOLDMAN VINDICATED BUT BRUISED IN LIBYAN FUND COURT BATTLE

The outcome of a 2½-year legal battle between Goldman Sachs and Libya's $67 billion sovereign fund is a triumph for the Wall Street giant, which was vindicated despite embarrassing revelations about how some of its bankers conducted business. The London High Court found in favor of Goldman Sachs on Friday, with Judge Vivien Rose dismissing the fund's arguments, made over the course of a bruising seven-week trial. While the Libyan Investment Authority (LIA) is likely to appeal, according to a source with knowledge of the matter, the lurid details spilling out of the case mesmerized observers because of the profile of the parties involved and the glimpse they offered into the secretive world of multi-billion-dollar sovereign wealth fund (SWF) investments.

Summer redux

Bolaris' Weather Watch

JOHN BOLARIS
@weathersavior

Get ready to shed the sweaters and jackets as summer will make a comeback this week.

Normally during this time of the year, you start reaching for your autumnal gear. Well, put that on hold as temperatures will rise to near-record levels for some as southwesterly winds will usher in unseasonably warm temperatures.

It's a late-season Bermuda high-influence, high-pressure centered over the western Atlantic. A huge clockwise flow of southwesterly winds circulates near Bermuda and extends down into the Gulf states and then sweeps up along the Eastern seaboard.

The results during July and August would be helter-swelter with the mercury soaring into the mid-90s. However, during this time of the year many locations from Philly to New York City to Boston will see temps pop into the mid-80s. Low temperatures by Tuesday morning will be in the lower 60s — normally this would be about the average high for this time of the year.

Now I know what you're thinking: Will this warm shot last into your up-coming weekend? Sorry no can do, as a coastal low could form by Friday and send some rain up along the East Coast, followed by much cooler temperatures over this weekend as the mercury falls back into the 60s and 50s.

On average, October will have above-normal temperatures and below normal precipitation.

Boston

Today: Mostly cloudy, High 70

Tuesday: Warmer, High 78

Wednesday: Summer-like weather, High 80

Thursday: Scattered showers, High 68

Friday: Rain likely, High 63

Saturday: Rain ends by noon, windy, cool, High 57

Sunday: Mostly sunny, High 57

Hurricane season

My long-range hurricane outlook that I put out in May, for the season of 2016 was for an active hurricane season with more named storms than normal. Most experts had a below-average outlook. So far this season, my forecast has verified as the hurricane season has been quite active with already 14 named storms as Hurricane Nicole struck the island of Bermuda this past Thursday as a major hurricane. Nicole continues to churn massively high seas in the North Atlantic creating problems for the shipping and fishing lanes. I'm forecasting continued tropical activity through the month of October.

Surgeon removes kidney from wrong patient

The federal Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services threatened to terminate Saint Vincent Hospital from the Medicare program if the center does not adopt improvements.

CHRIS CAESAR

St. Vincent Hospital in Worcester. GOOGLE MAPS

A surgeon at a Worcester hospital removed a kidney from the wrong patient after failing to confirm the person's identity, public health inspectors found.

The mistake prompted federal authorities to threatened to terminate Saint Vincent Hospital from the Medicare program on Dec. 12 if it doesn't adopt improvements, the Boston Globe reported.

The doctor was not named in the report by the federal Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services.

The surgery, which occurred on July 20, was intended to remove a kidney because of a large tumor, according to the agency's report.

"It was later determined that [the patient's] admission and plan for surgery to remove the tumorous kidney was based on another patient's Computerized Tomography scan results, in error," the report read.

Both patients had the same name, but were reportedly several years apart in age.

Authorities told The Associated Press that the hospital failed to follow proper patient identification protocols, which include secondary confirmation of a patient's identity, as with a date of birth.

"We are working to implement enhanced safeguards as identified in the CMS survey, including additional verification steps with physicians," a statement from the hospital, provided to the Globe, read. "This was a deeply unfortunate situation and we will take all steps necessary to prevent it from happening again."

The report noted that investigators did find lapses at the hospital, including the fact that computers only displayed names, and not patients' birth dates.

Police ask for public's help to find serial arsonist

Tyngsborough police are asking for the public's help to find what they believe is a serial arsonist who set fire to 11 vehicies during the weekend — one of which spread to an adjacent house.

The fires mostly occurred during what appears to be a half-hour spree from about 2:30 a.m. to 3 a.m. on Oct 8, the department said Friday in a news release.

A car was torched at about 10:45 a.m. Oct. 7, and authorities believe it is connected to the arsons that happened hours later.

"The perpetrators of this act will be found and held responsible," Police Chief Richard Howe said in a written statement. "They not only intentionally destroyed the property of law abiding Tyngsborough residents, but also endangered community members, as their actions could have caused a much more serious fire."

GETTY IMAGES

The fires occurred outside six residences where as many as three cars or motorized scooters in the driveways were burned.

One car fire spread to the adjacent home, authorities said.

The incidents are being investigated by the Tyngsborough police and fire departments, and state police assigned to the Office of the State Fire Marshal.

Anyone with information about the fires is encouraged to call the Arson Hotline at 1-800-682-9229. All calls are confidential, and rewards up to $5,000 for information leading to an arrest are available. CHRIS CAESAR

Wheels of justice barely turn at Gitmo prison

War crimes trials at Guantanamo Bay for suspects accused of attacks against the United States have ground to a near halt a decade after the military courts' creation, with lawyers warning that some detainees could spend many more years waiting to be tried.

Despite President Barack Obama's early vows to close the facility in eastern Cuba amid charges that suspects had been tortured, the United States continues to spend some $91 million a year on military trials at the base, which has 61 remaining inmates.

"The military commissions in their current state are a farce," Marine Brigadier General John Baker, the chief defense counsel, said last month at a Washington legal conference, of the tribunals that prosecute detainees. "The Guantanamo Bay military commissions have been characterized by delay, government misconduct and incompetence, and more delay."

Guantanamo Bay, Cuba GETTY IMAGES

James Connell, a defense lawyer for Kuwaiti Ammar al Baluchi, one of five suspects on trial for their alleged roles in the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, said that trial was not likely until maybe 2020, almost two decades after airline hijackers killed nearly 3,000 people.

Because the court and much of the evidence lies outside the United States, the trial "is 100 times more complex than even a complex ordinary death penalty case," said Connell.

In contrast with Guantanamo, federal prosecutors operating in U.S. courts have secured more than 340 terrorism convictions over the last decade, a Justice Department spokesman said. Tanzanian Ahmed Khalfan Ghailani was transferred from Guantanamo to New York in 2009, and 17 months later a civilian jury convicted him for his role in al Qaeda bombings in East Africa. He is serving a life sentence.

Just six Guantanamo cases have resulted in convictions so far, with two guilty verdicts being appealed, according to the military commissions' website. In one appeals case, a federal court overturned two of the three convictions of Ali Hamza al Bahlul, the suspected publicist for slain al Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden. An appeal decision is pending on the third charge.

THE FINAL ROUNDS

Here's how I imagine debate preps: Donald Trump is looking endlessly in the mirror, making a duck face and Hillary Clinton keeps watching the movie "Election" while cheering for Reese Witherspoon. Meanwhile, here are my three things to watch this week in politics.

1. DEBATE REBATE
The final presidential debate comes up Wednesday, and it promises to be a slugfest. Both candidates have tried boxing their way through these matches (well, her mainly) but any semblance to civility is now gone. He'll say the election is rigged and that she's doping her way through their discussions (and no, he won't get the drug test he wants). She will accuse him of consorting with the Russians, being unfit for office and perhaps howling-at-the-moon. None of which will help either of them win voters — although each might scare a few more to the other side.

2. REPUBLICAN REGRETS
The GOP is in turmoil. Traditional Republicans, who were barely able to stomach Trump before, are now choking down antacids by the fistful, just as afraid of him winning as losing. Tea Partiers are rattling around in Ted Cruz T-shirts clucking "I told you so's." And the Trump Army is screaming about spineless hypocrites. So, if you are interested in party unity, watch the polls: If Trump surges again, watch all sorts of GOPers start crawling back on his wagon; if not, listen for echoes from Capitol Hill: Donald who?

3. NOTHING TO SEE HERE
In any normal election all the stories about the Clinton team's hacked emails would dominate the news for days. Snippy comments about staffers, secret speech scripts, naked talk of political posturing. Juicy stuff, right? And it is getting a bit of play, but the uproar around Trump is dominating. The question this week: Can he get out of the spotlight long enough, for her problems to be scrutinized? Considering the scope and severity of his issues ... not likely.

BRIEF

Transcripts of Clinton's Wall Street talks released in new Wikileaks dump
Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton's full remarks to several Wall Street audiences appeared to become public on Saturday when the controversial transparency group Wikileaks dumped its latest batch of hacked emails.

The documents showed comments by Clinton during question-and-answer sessions with Goldman Sachs Chief Executive Lloyd Blankfein and Tim O'Neill, the bank's head of investment management, at three separate events in 2013 in Arizona, New York and South Carolina.

Some excerpts of Clinton's speeches had already been released. For more than a week, Wikileaks has published in stages what it says are hacked emails from the account of John Podesta, Clinton's campaign chairman.

Clinton's campaign has declined to verify the emails. Goldman Sachs did not immediately provide any comment on Saturday.

Clinton came under fire for months for not releasing full details of her paid speeches to big business audiences, as opponents accused her of a cozy relationship with bankers and other members of the U.S. financial system. REUTERS

Pence: Russia should face 'severe consequences' if it's behind hack
Republican vice presidential candidate Mike Pence contradicted running mate Donald Trump on Sunday by saying evidence points to Russian involvement in email hacks tied to the U.S. election and that Moscow should face "severe consequences" if it has compromised U.S. email security.

Pence, appearing in television interviews, also said he and Trump would respect the outcome of the Nov. 8 election. But later the same day Trump stuck by his contention that the race is being "rigged" by the media and at voting locations.

"The election is absolutely being rigged by the dishonest and distorted media pushing Crooked Hillary — but also at many polling places — SAD," Trump wrote on Twitter on Sunday.

U.S. intelligence officials believe Russia is behind recent email hacks targeting Democratic Party officials, including the continuing dumps by Wikileaks of documents stolen from the email account of Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton's campaign chairman, John Podesta.

"I think there's no question that the evidence continues to point in that direction," Pence said. "There should be severe consequences to Russia or any sovereign nation that is compromising the privacy or the security of the United States of America."

Vice President Joe Biden said in an interview that aired on Sunday that the United States would respond but he gave no details. "We're sending a message," he said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Intruder shot at Miranda Kerr's home

Just as we are finally loosening up a bit after Kim Kardashian West's harrowing experience with armed robbers in Paris, another violent altercation has us clutching our pearls. According to local news outlets, on Friday morning, a security guard at the home of Miranda Kerr confronted an intruder who somehow scaled an electric fence to gain access to the property. A gory altercation ensued between the two men, which left the security guard stabbed in the eye and the intruder shot multiple times.

It appears that Kerr, the supermodel who is engaged to billionaire Snapchat founder Evan Spiegel, was not home at the time of the break-in. Witnesses suspect that the intruder was homeless. This incident has made it frighteningly clear that security to the stars need to be trained in more than thwarting paparazzi.

Billy Bush nearing settlement to leave 'Today' show

Last week, we reported that Billy Bush had been suspended from the "Today Show" indefinitely over his participation in a vulgar 2005 conversation with Donald Trump, that included talks of trying to sleep with married women and grabbing other women "by the p—." We're still grossed out about it. Obviously NBC is, too. Now, with negotiations closed, Bush is nearing a settlement deal with the network over his permanent separation from the show, CNN reports.

It was initially reported that Bush would receive $10 million, but representatives from the network quickly shut that down, although that amount may not be far off. The Daily Mail reports that Bush is actually looking at $9 million. We think it's safe to say that this is the best way to get fired, ever.

Beyoncé performs with ripped earlobe

Beyoncé is the greatest living performer and we're not here to argue about it. Even though she's finished her "Formation World Tour," the 35-year-old performer graced the stage again for Tidal X: 1015, a concert which raised money for the Robin Hood Foundation at Brooklyn's Barclays Center on Saturday night. But it wasn't an entirely graceful affair. Queen Bey's earring ripped during her performance of "Haunted" and she started bleeding! But it takes more than a little blood to stop this show. Baddie Bey wiped the blood from her ear and kept the show going without missing a beat. Not that we expected anything less.

Olivia Wilde welcomes baby No. 2

GETTY IMAGES

Actress Olivia Wilde and funnyman/screenwriter husband Jason Sudeikis are now a family of four! The couple welcomed a baby girl on Oct. 11, which was ironically also International Day of the Girl. How cool is that? We've been expecting this new addition from the couple since Wilde has been making public appearances well into her third trimester.

Wilde kept the actual birth pretty low profile, she posted an Instagram picture of her not-even-a-week-old daughter on Saturday, four days after she was born. Her name is Daisy Josephine Sudeikis, and she is giving us some serious baby fever.

Kim makes first appearance since robbery

It looks like the Kardashian clan is slowly coming around after Kim's harrowing robbery. Last Thursday evening, Kim Kardashian West was spotted out for the first time since heading home to Los Angeles after her terrifying Parisian ordeal. E! News reported that she was low key in a black hoodie and leggings for a quick trip to a Beverly Hills restaurant. She rushed back to her awaiting car about 30 minutes later, flanked by security, of course.

Younger sis Kendall Jenner, who had to testify against a stalker earlier in the day, made her first public appearance since the incident on Thursday, as well. US Weekly reports the 20 year-old supermodel toasted the opening of a new What Goes Around Comes Around store in Los Angeles and filmed a couple of scenes for an upcoming season of "Keeping Up with the Kardashians." No matter how much they may want to, the Kardashians can't hide from the cameras.

So funny you could die

"A Gentleman's Guide to Love and Murder" is heavy on the murder, with a double dose of love.

Kristen Hahn PROVIDED

Murder is a dirty business, but in "A Gentleman's Guide to Love and Murder," it's more of an elegant execution.

"He does it in the most gentlemanly of ways," says actress Kristen Hahn, who portrays one of the two love interests the show's leading man takes on. "There's nothing gory or violent about it."

The national tour of the Tony-winning production arrives in Boston on Oct. 18 for a six-day run at the Citi Shubert Theatre. The musical, which took home four Tony Awards, including Best Musical in 2014, ended its Broadway run in late January but has been on the road since last September. Hahn, a Connecticut native who was part of the original Broadway ensemble, joins the touring cast as Phoebe D'Ysquith, an aristocratic woman who finds herself in a love triangle with the show's misguidedly murderous protagonist, Monty.

"It's very tongue-in-cheek," says Hahn from the tour's stop in Detroit. "[Monty] is a distant heir to a fortune and title, so he decides to bump off the other relatives that stand in his way of becoming earl."

Dark? Maybe. But Hahn assures us it's still a good time, and that audience members might even find themselves empathizing with Kevin Massey's Monty. "These eight [murdered] relatives are all played by one brilliant actor [John Rapson], but are all deplorable human beings," she adds.

As for Phoebe, Hahn says her character and Monty find common ground as misunderstood members of society. Phoebe, a wealthy woman of means, is presumed to be "haughty and distant," when she really just seeks human companionship.

"She has a heart of gold and is a loving and gentle person," Hahn explains. "Phoebe has a sort of coming out throughout the show and develops into a confident woman. I think everyone has felt misunderstood at different times in their lives, and can relate to her and Monty's experiences in one way or another."

Unfortunately for Phoebe, she's one of two loves of Monty's life, competing (somewhat unbeknownst) for his affection with Sibella Hallward, a saucier lady of leisure who is holding out for a husband of, ahem, greater monetary assets.

But for Hahn, any ill will between the characters is kept to the stage. "We're wonderful friends," she says of co-star Kristen Beth Williams. "I don't get to interact a lot with her on stage, but I love watching her scenes. She's brilliant."

Still dark? OK, maybe. But Hahn believes Robert L. Freedman and Steven Lutvak's lyrics and music are enough to put anyone in a good mood.

"It's so stunningly beautiful, with lush, soaring melodies," she says. "I find myself singing them all day long. I wake up singing them, I go to sleep singing them. They're extremely catchy; you won't be able to stop humming along."

Meet 'Accountant' star Cynthia Addai-Robinson

The British-born actress gets her big break as a Treasury agent hunting down Ben Affleck.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Cynthia Addai-Robinson plays a worker bee at the Treasury Department tasked with finding out the truth about Ben Affleck's mysterious number-cruncher in "The Accountant." CHUCK ZLOTNICK

Before "The Accountant," Cynthia Addai-Robinson was just your average struggling actor. She has plenty of credits to her name: She was Naevia in "Spartacus: War of the Damned," Amanda Waller in "Arrow," Emily West in "Texas Rising." But "The Accountant" is her first big role in a big movie. She plays Marybeth, a worker bee at the Treasury Department tasked (blackmailed, really) by a fed (J.K. Simmons) to figure out the truth about a math wiz (Ben Affleck) who might have mob ties. The movie arrives shortly before "Shooter," the forthcoming USA show based on the Mark Wahlberg movie, in which she's the female lead opposite Ryan Phillippe.

Born in England but raised in America, Addai-Stevenson, 31, talks to us about liking dense movies, her sudden flurry of strong roles and the difficulty of staring at computer screens onscreen.

I have to admit this movie is so dense that I don't think I got all of it. Even at the end when I could piece it all together, I was sure I was missing a lot of nuances.

I personally like these kinds of movies, where it plays out and then it gets to the end and you're thinking back to everything you just watched. You want to go back and watch it again. Everything that's being presented is there for a reason; there's not a shot or frame that's wasted. Every little piece of information is meaningful. It feels like there are fewer and fewer times in life where something is really demanding that of you, where you shut everything else out and really focus on the story unfolding in front of you. It's like reading a satisfying book.

GETTY IMAGES

Marybeth is a very quiet person who's always thinking. Did you identify with that?

I tend to be a pretty analytical person. I'm somebody who's constantly thinking and always in my own head. Perhaps that element works for this character. I'm a pretty reserved, quiet person, though I'm not necessarily passive. If I'm just sitting still, there's a lot going on in my brain.

You spend a lot of the movie staring at computer screens. I imagine that's weirdly difficult to do and not make look strange.

[Laughs] You don't want to push it. It can start getting a little weird if you're staring at a computer and you feel you have to contort your face to show the audience I'm discovering things, connecting the dots. You don't want to be too heavy-handed about it.

J.K. Simmons' character tasks her with working with him on this case, as though he sees something in her she doesn't know she has. As an actor, do you feel that way a lot?

I'm not in a position where I can select my roles. I have to audition the old-fashioned way. I prepared [for this] as I do for anything I go in for. But at the end of the day, whatever qualities they saw in me were ones I wasn't aware of. I've been having more and more instances like that. And I've even been having a better sense of myself. When people give you more and more opportunities, you start owning that. That's been a lovely discovery for me the last few years. I've been lucky to play female characters who are strong, are intelligent, are a little vulnerable.

In "Certain Women," in theaters today, Kristen Stewart plays Beth, an overworked night school teacher who forms a budding friendship with a lonely woman (Lily Gladstone). IFC FILMS

Kristen Stewart thinks we all need to relax

The actress gushes about her new movie, "Certain Women," and her director, Kelly Reichardt.

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

Kristen Stewart knew she had to work with Kelly Reichardt. The "Wendy and Lucy" filmmaker's previous movie, "Night Moves," starred two of her friends, Dakota Fanning and Jesse Eisenberg. "Both of them were like, 'Do anything with her!'" she recalls. And so we have "Certain Women," which tells three stories of women: Laura Dern plays a lawyer who gets involved in a hostage situation; Michelle Williams pops up in the second act as a woman struggling with her marriage. Stewart comes in during the third, playing a frazzled night school teacher who draws the mysterious attention of a lonely young woman (Lily Gladstone). It's a sad movie. And Stewart, 26, loves it that way.

We could just spend most of this interview geeking out over Kelly Reichardt together.

I f—ing love her. I'm lucky enough to know her, and I can tell you that her movies really reflect her. You watch one and it's very distinctly her. That's kind of rare. She's able to create this whole environment that focuses on moments that happen in between the moments that people often focus on in movies. There's something biting about her movies, too. I don't think you laugh, but you think, "That's funny. That's really funny."

Her new film is a film about women, but it's not overtly a political statement, or it doesn't let itself be defined only by that.

They're each up against something, but not in a way that's self-aggrandizing. It's not like, [shakes fist] "I am going to overcome this adversity!" None of them find resolve. They all want something they can't have. You've got Michelle's character, who's kind of f—ing with the conventional dynamic of what a marriage is. And then you have Laura's character acknowledging the illogical nature of bureaucracy, and the fact that men don't listen to women. But she doesn't really do anything about it. It's agonizing, but in a quiet way.

What about your character?

My chick just wants to feel f—ing valid, and she isn't going to [feel valid] while doing the things she's doing. And you've got Lily's character, who just wants a friend. She has a crush on someone and doesn't even know what the hell that even is. These people are f—ing lonely. And it's f—ing painful.

The character interactions are so complex and speak to this idea that we'll never really know anyone. But I'd like to argue that acknowledging that we'll always get people wrong is kind of a relief.

We're all so unaware of each other. But [knowing that] does set you free a little bit. It's weird. I'm constantly, with every friendship, every f—ing family relationship, I'm like, "You need to know me!" Then you realize no one can know anyone. And it is relieving. There's a relief to that. We never really know each other. On the other hand, that's isolating and scary.

I've found that as I've gotten older I've gotten more chill about not having a deep connection with every person I meet.

I've done that as I've gotten older, too. When I was younger I got superf-reaked out if there wasn't a clarity to every exchange. Now it's like, "That's fine, whatever, I don't care."

YG gets personal, political on 'Still Brazy'

The rapper isn't afraid to go all-in on sensitive topics.

CHRIS LEO PALERMINO

YG tackles tough topics and takes on Donald Trump on his June Def Jam release, "Still Brazy." GETTY IMAGES

The Compton, California-based rapper's second album, called "Still Brazy," dives into figuring out who shot him last year, gangster culture, anti-police brutality and his hatred of Donald Trump. Heavy? Perhaps, but YG isn't afraid to get into it.

"I'm talking about the s— I've been through with my homies, my robbing history when I was young, my gang s—, all that," says YG, whose birth name is Keenon Jackson. "That [was] dangerous so it just stand out the most."

"Who Shot Me?" is the fearful, incredibly intimate highlight on his follow-up album to 2014's "My Krazy Life." In an exasperated tone, YG repeats the simple question over minor beats. "It was real," says the rapper of the song. "I just got shot like two nights before, so it was real dark for me."

Political overtones

The record ends with three timely tracks: "FDT (F— Donald Trump)," "Blacks & Browns" — about racism against African-Americans and Hispanics — and "Police Get Away Wit Murder."

He even named his fall tour the F— Donald Trump Tour. YG explains, "You kept hearing this motherf—er say and do disrespectful things toward our people, our culture, our race."

West Coast roots

"She gave me my style," he says about his hometown, Compton. "She gave me my outlook on life. She gave me my mama. My mind-set — [I've] seen a lot, did a lot, been through a lot."

From early on, the rapper heard his mom play West Coast hip-hop legends like Dr. Dre, N.W.A. and Snoop Dogg as well as '90s R&B.

"That 100 percent has something to do with my rap style and the way I rap," he adds. "The beats I choose. My flows and all of that."

And he isn't afraid to experiment either: the Drake-featuring, hook-laden "Why You Always Hatin'?" could be a Top 40 hit.

A rallying cry

While YG notes that he's mostly telling his stories, he does hope his political songs inspire young fans.

"There ain't really no message on here except at the end of the album when I get political. I'm just really talking to the youth and trying to get my fellas to wake up and get more involved with what's going on," he encourages. "Speak up and use your voice."

How to make working from home work for you

Social media personality Estee Lalonde shares her advice for staying productive and happy.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

YouTube star Estee Lalonde can educate, inspire and interact with her 1.1 million subscribers without ever leaving the comfort of her own home. Sounds like a dream setup, right?

Usually.

"My life is on the internet, it's a digital life," she says. "It can get lonely just to be home all the time, at your desk, without much interaction. And when you do get interaction, it's about work. It was hard for me to get used to that— just me in my living room or bed. It's lonely."

The 26-year-old Londoner has been filming YouTube beauty and lifestyle videos for her channel (formerly known as Essie Button) for the better half of this decade. Originally started as a way to combat homesickness (Lalonde moved from her native Waterloo, Ontario, to the U.K.) her following quickly grew as she shared her charmingly high-energy beauty tutorials, fitness journeys and DIYs with hundreds of thousands of fans. Her cult following amassed to such a number, Lalonde snagged a book deal with "Bloom," her debut memoir out this month from Appetite by Random House.

Estee Lalonde

But how does she do it? Here Lalonde shares her advice for maintaining a work-life balance, when your work is … well, your life.

Designate a no-screen zone

When screens and all that come with them are such an integral part of our lives, answering that one little e-mail in one tab, while we cozy up in bed to Netflix on another can't be that bad — right?

Wrong. "I have a rule where I cut myself off at 7 p.m., no matter what," says Lalonde, who typically works from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. during the weekdays with scattered hours over the weekend. "My boyfriend and I also have a rule that we have no laptops in the bedroom — that was the hardest to get used to. Eventually you'll just get into the routine where you don't need to be checking all the time."

Create a clean workspace — and maintain it

"I'm at home pretty much every day, to be honest, unless I'm traveling," explains Lalonde, who can be typically found shooting videos in her bright, minimalistic workspace. "I always make sure my office is clean. If I have papers everywhere, it drives me insane. I keep it ready to be worked in."

And even when your home is your office, the distractions can pile up — literally. "If there are loads of dishes in the sink, I get distracted," she confesses. "I think keeping everything tidy is so important."

Plan ahead and keep your eye on the prize

Lalonde says she plans out her content about two months ahead of time, using iCal to organize the days and the times she'll release each new video, which she films a month in advance.

"I like to keep content flowing," she explains. "[Creating] content a month in advance keeps me available to travel, or if I have a conflict." A long-term calendar of deadlines and publication dates not only keeps Lalonde plugging along with a sense of purpose through preparedness, it provides an idea of when she can actually feel done.

"I work a lot," she says. "I'm not shouting it from the rooftops, because everyone works really hard. I love being busy, I find it fascinating and I get a lot of fulfillment from it. But I'm trying to work toward having more personal time. I'm getting better at it."

The four-day work week

Experts say restructured time could increase efficiency and health of workers.

DANIEL CASILLAS
Metro World News
letters@metro.us

Could you be even more productive in just four days? ISTOCK

Many social organizations, renowned experts and even one of the richest men in the world, Carlos Slim, have voiced their enthusiasm for a shorter working week, with the aim of improving the lives of employees and boosting the economy.

There are existing success stories to support the move to a shorter week —four 10-hour days — but many companies are still reluctant to reduce their employees' hours. Experts, however, argue that a reduction in the working week — without a reduction in pay — can provide us with significant environmental, social, and economic benefits.

"A shorter working week could improve well-being, challenge gender inequalities, leave us with more time to spend with friends and family, more time to actively participate in our communities, and with more free time to spend doing the things we love," Aidan Harper, assistant researcher at New Economics Foundation, explains.

The shortening of the workweek, say experts, could also help cities and even society in general by reducing traffic issues and energy consumption.

"Our society will also benefit as a whole as office commuters and corresponding traffic will be reduced," says Pramila Rao, associate professor of human resources at Marymount University. "This will significantly lower environmental pollution, especially in metropolitan areas. Organizations can save on energy bills making the environment more green-friendly."

However, while there are many groups that support the idea of shortening the workweek and there are many arguments in favor, experts warn that four 10-hour days does not suit all businesses, and others say that it could cause health problems for workers,

Allard Dembe, professor of public health at Ohio State University, recently wrote in the journal The Conversation about hidden hazards in "compressing" five working days into four, such as the health effects that can occur as a result of fatigue and stress that accumulate over a longer-than-normal working day. The professor adds that for employees who are already suffering from overwork, the additional burden of compressing five days into four could break the worker's back.

3 Things we learned in the Patriots impressive win over Cincinnati

In Tom Brady's actual return to New England, the quarterback shined — as did his reliable sidekick Rob Gronkowski.

MATTHEW BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

Sunday's 35-17 win by the Patriots over the Bengals was a Bill Belichick classic.

The Pats head coach used the first half as not much more than a "feeling-out process," and in the second half at Gillette Stadium the Pats looked like the Pats. The strong finish enabled New England to move to 5-1 on the season. The Pats are on the road the next two weeks as they will face the Steelers in Pittsburgh next Sunday and will be at the Bills on Oct. 30. New England's bye week is the weekend after the Buffalo game.

Here are three things we learned in the Pats' victory Sunday:

1 Adjust and advance

Tom Brady felt constant pressure in the first half as the offensive line reverted to 2015 form. Brady was rushed on throws in his first two drives and the offense looked out of synch, only registering a Stephen Gostkowski 46-yard field goal in the first quarter.

But as they typically do, the Patriots made key adjustments at halftime and came out on fire in the second half. Rob Gronkowski found the end zone for the first time in 2016, catching a four yard TD pass from Brady with five minutes left in the third to give the Pats a 19-14 advantage. James White, who also scored in the second quarter with a 15-yard TD reception, caught a four-yard TD pass from Brady with 2:58 left in the third to give the Pats a 25-14 lead.

Brady ended up near-flawless again, completing 29-of-35 passes for 376 yards, three touchdowns and zero interceptions.

2 Do your job

The Patriots' defense was again stout, allowing just 17 points to Cincy. The Bengals weren't exactly the 2007 Patriots coming into Sunday's game, averaging just 18.4 points per game, but New England's effort on Sunday was admirable nonetheless. Dont'a Hightower ripped down Bengals quarterback Andy Dalton in the end zone with 7:05 left in the third as the Pats earned a sack and safety. Hightower and Pats defensive end Jabaal Sheard also sacked Dalton on a big third down with just under four minutes left.

Cincy's Pro Bowl receiver AJ Green showed flashes of brilliance, but the Pats' secondary did a decent job on him - limiting him to 88 yard receiving on six catches. Green did not find the end zone.

3 Get nasty

The Patriots were all business against Cincy, but had time to show a mean streak. When Brady came onto the Foxboro field for the first time since his suspension, he did not even wait a second to motion to the standing and vocal crowd to quiet down. And in the fourth quarter, Gronkowski shredded the Bengals defense and let the Cincy players know about it - consistently talking trash to Bengals cornerback Adam "Pacman" Jones and Bengals linebacker Vontaze Burfict. Gronkowski finished with a career-high 162 yards receiving on seven catches.

LeGarrette Blount, who rushed for 50 yards and a touchdown on 13 carries, also got into it with the Bengals defense at the end of the game.

Nail-biters, individual performances in Week 6

There was no shortage of excitement on the gridiron Sunday.

LUKE MILLER
@MetroPhilly
sports@metro.us

Here's a look at the early action in Week 6 around the NFL:

New Orleans 41, Carolina 38
The Panthers (1-5) dropped their fourth straight game despite welcoming Cam Newton back to the lineup. Newton and Drew Brees combined for 97 pass attempts in this shootout in the Superdome. Brandin Cooks led all receivers with 173 yards and the Saints (2-3) rookie kicker Wil Lutz ended the scoring with a 52-yard field goal for the victory.

Jacksonville 17, Chicago 16
Arrelious Benn took a slant 51 yards for his first touchdown since 2011 and completed a Jaguars (2-3) comeback where they scored all 17 of their points in the fourth quarter. Jordan Howard continued to feature in the Chicago (1-5) backfield but couldn't maintain his success, finishing with 34 yards on 15 carries.

Buffalo 45, San Francisco 16
Ugly scenes outside the Bills' stadium inspired by Colin Kaepernick's return to the starting lineup gave way to another dominating performance by Buffalo (4-2) at home. Kaepernick connected with Torrey Smith for a 53-yard touchdown to put the Niners (1-5) up 10-7 early, but then LeSean McCoy took it to his old coach with 140 yards rushing and three touchdowns. The Bills finished the day with 312 yards rushing.

Detroit 31, Los Angeles 28
Case Keenum and Matthew Stafford dueled through the air, and Kenny Britt and Golden Tate were their respective weapons of choice. After eight straight touchdowns Matt Prater nailed a 34-yard field goal to give the Lions (3-3) the victory over the Rams (3-3) in a game that neither team led by more than a touchdown.

NUMBER OF RECEIVING YARDS FOR ODELL BECKHAM JR., A CAREER HIGH.

Miami 30, Pittsburgh 15
Ben Roethlisberger was briefly knocked out of this game, but the Steelers (4-2) struggled all day regardless of their quarterback to move the ball and stop the Miami (2-4) run game. Jay Ajayi rolled up 204 yards and two scores while Steelers' defenders bounced off him. Darrius Heyward-Bey took a reverse 60-yards for Pittsburgh's first touchdown of the game, and their only points before the fourth quarter.

New York Giants 27, Baltimore 23
Odell Beckham Jr. recovered from an early fumble to explode for 222 yards and two touchdowns against the Ravens (3-3). The second took a slant pass 66 yards to put the Giants (3-3) ahead in the final minute. His celebration almost proved costly however, penalizing the Giants ensuing kickoff and allowing Baltimore to march to the Giants' 25-yard line before coming up short.

Tennessee 28, Cleveland 26
Terrelle Pryor caught his second touchdown of the day from Cody Kessler but the Browns (0-6) couldn't convert the two-point conversion to get within a score and it ultimately kept them in the losers column despite scoring the final 13 points of the game against Tennessee (3-3). Marcus Mariota had his second straight game with three passing touchdowns.

Washington 27, Philadelphia 20
The Eagles (3-2) lost their second straight while committing over 110 yards in penalties for the second straight week. Washington (4-2) jumped ahead of the Eagles in the division while winning their fourth straight. Matt Jones had 135 yards and a touchdown on the ground, while the Eagles only touchdowns came via a Malcolm Jenkins pick six and Wendell Smallwood kick return.

Carson Wentz is finally beginning to look like a rookie. GETTY IMAGES

Aries You might run into one of your least favorite people at a social gathering. If you allow your dislike to surface, the event is likely to lose its luster.

Taurus A disagreement between you and your mate could turn into something serious if neither one of you shows a willingness to compromise.

Gemini Criticism of someone's work will not necessarily help enhance his or her performance. To encourage this person, your comments must be constructive and positive.

Cancer If you haven't been too good about managing your money lately, you won't have the funds you need to buy that something you want. Plan better for the future.

Leo Any restrictions to which you might be subjected are not likely to be the fault of others, but will be a product of your own mismanagement.

Virgo If you're too self-involved, your efforts aren't likely to bring you much satisfaction today. This malady can easily be cured by putting the needs of others first.

Libra Allowing friends to pressure you into spending more money could cause you to resent them instead of yourself. You must be the one who has the willpower to abstain.

Scorpio Because you're likely to do everything the hard way, you may not be able to achieve all of your objectives. Try to use your time wisely.

Sagittarius Guard against a tendency to anticipate negative outcomes. If you think you might fail, you'll make sure to find a way to prove yourself right.

Capricorn Don't allow yourself to get into a a bad financial position. Don't start borrowing from friends if you'll have trouble paying them back.

Aquarius Be careful, because your colleagues could have a stronger influence over your doings than you'd like. Their aims might not be in harmony with yours.

Pisces If you have a bad attitude, unplanned developments could become overwhelming. Try to roll with the punches and hope for the best. EUGENIA LAST
